Curriculum Vitae for Randy Ellingboe

Randy Ellingboe has been the Manager of the Section of Drinking Water Protection at the Minnesota Department of Health (MDH) since 2008. The Section is responsible for administering the Safe Drinking Water Act, and works with public water supply systems to prepare source water protection plans required by state rule. Management of Minnesota's water resources is distributed among four state agencies (health, pollution control, agriculture and natural resources) and a strong system of local government. This presents both challenges and opportunities for ensuring safe drinking water through strategic collaboration and communication with many partners.

Randy served on the ASDWA Board as representative for EPA Region 5 in 2010 and 2011. He has also participated in ASDWA subgroups and committees developing recommendations for the Drinking Water Revolving Fund, Clean Water Act/Safe Drinking Water Act collaboration, and source water protection. His work experience also includes 8 years as supervisor of the Minnesota Plumbing Program plan review and inspection program. Prior to that, he spent 12 years with the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency (MPCA) working on review of livestock and poultry facilities for impacts of runoff, manure storage, and nutrient management on water quality. He came to the MPCA from the Department of Agronomy at the University of Minnesota, where he spent 12 years in hay and pastureland management research. He has degrees in biology from St. Olaf College and in civil engineering from the University of Minnesota, and is a licensed professional engineer.
