Mike Walls has primary responsibility for the American Chemistry Council's policy development. He began work for the Council in 1986, where he first provided legal advice on a range of international environmental, trade and product regulation issues. He has broad experience across a wide range of U.S. domestic chemical regulatory issues, including the Toxic Substances Control Act (TSCA) and the recent amendments to the law made by the Lautenberg Chemical Safety Act of 2016.

Before joining the Council Mike was in private law practice in Washington, D.C., and served on the staff of U.S. Senator Jim Sasser. He has degrees from Georgetown University (BSFS, 1980; MBA, 1999) and Syracuse University College of Law (JD, 1984). He is a member of the District of Columbia (1984), Virginia (1985), Federal District and Appeals Courts in the District of Columbia and Virginia, Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the U.S. Supreme Court.
