

Yvette Arellano is the founder & director of Fenceline Watch, an environmental justice organization dedicated to the eradication of toxic multigenerational harm on communities living along the fenceline of industry. They were instrumental in the Center for International Environmental Law Plastic and Health: The Hidden Cost of a Plastic Planet. Yvette has testified before EPA, state and federal legislative bodies about public health impacts and solutions at the fenceline. In their advocacy, they have aided in crisis response to post-chemical disasters and contributed in efforts to stop plastic expansion. They are leading efforts in removing historical barriers to limit public participation in these efforts. Yvette serves as a board member for the Center for International Environmental Law, Backbone Campaign, Greenlatinos, and Peak Plastic Foundation.
