

Jim Savage is a Legislative Representative for the United Steelworkers (USW) in its Legislative and Policy Department in Washington, DC. USW's Legislative and Policy Department endeavors to protect workers through the use of policy and legislative action at all levels of government. In his role, he leads the Union's chemical safety efforts and focuses on a variety of other issues facing the oil and chemical sectors. Jim also handles veteran's issues, immigration matters, and more.

Prior to joining USW staff, Jim worked at the Sunoco/PES refinery in South Philadelphia for 27 years. During his years in the refinery, Jim was a head operator on a reformer and a light ends recovery unit and was responsible for the safe, reliable, and environmentally sound operation of these units.

Jim is a proud veteran of the United States Marine Corps. Raised in a working-class family in suburban Philadelphia, he is the proud father of one son. He is excited to watch his Philadelphia Eagles win the Super Bowl this year.