

Keefe Harrison, CEO

Keefe Harrison is a founder and the CEO of The Recycling Partnership, a mission-driven NGO committed to protecting the planet by overhauling recycling and activating a circular economy in the U.S.

An international speaker, media pundit, and environmental author, Keefe is a 28-year veteran of the space, fiercely committed to her organization's mission of delivering lasting change. Under her leadership since 2014, The Partnership has grown from an idea to a national movement that's delivering a half a billion dollars' worth of impact in towns across America, captured more than 1 billion new pounds of recyclables... and they're just getting started. Before recycling, Keefe worked on a logging crew in North Carolina, researched sea turtles in Costa Rica, tracked tiny bog turtles in the U.S., and studied reindeer husbandry in Finland.

Why I Care About Recycling and a Circular Economy

"Growing up in a family of environmentalists, I have long believed in the importance of protecting biodiversity by conserving natural resources. I am committed to advancing meaningful, measurable change, and I am proud to be part of this team of passionate experts. Together, we're making a difference."

Personal Passions and Interests

Keefe enjoys traveling, gardening, cooking, and spending time outdoors with her family. She lives in Providence, Rhode Island with her husband and children, rescue dogs, and a few feisty backyard hens.
