

Katherine Garcia is Sierra Club's Clean Transportation for All Campaign Director. She advocates for improving access to affordable, reliable, and sustainable transportation options across the U.S. She leads a team of experts focused on urgently reducing the harmful environmental and public health impacts of transporting people and goods. Katherine serves on the National Center for Sustainable Transportation Leadership Council and is a Board Director for the League of American Bicyclists and Evergreen Action. Previously, she served as the clean transportation advocate at Sierra Club California, where she led the chapter's transportation policy work at the California Air Resources Board and the state legislature. Katherine earned a Master of Public Administration from Baruch College in New York City and Bachelor of Arts in Communication at the University of California, Santa Barbara. She lives with her family in Washington, DC.