Julie Moore is Secretary of the Vermont Agency of Natural Resources, the state agency with primary responsibility for protecting and sustaining Vermont's environment, natural resources, wildlife, and forests, and for maintaining Vermont's state parks. Moore was named to the position by Governor Phil Scott in January 2017. Over the past decade, Moore has implemented fair and consistent science-based environmental standards through transparent processes and robust stakeholder engagement, including developing and executing state-led initiatives to enhance landscape-level climate resilience, launching and managing new regulatory and incentive-based programs to combat nutrient pollution and protect water quality, and leading Vermont's response to emerging public health concerns related to per- and polyfluoroalkyl (PFAS) substances and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs).

In addition, Moore provided vision and oversight for the successful deployment of more than $500 million in federal funds under the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) and Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act (IIJA) across a wide-range of water infrastructure projects. These efforts include making investments in very small water and wastewater systems serving rural and manufactured housing communities, supporting the replacement of failed septic systems for income-qualified Vermont homeowners, reducing the frequency and intensity of combined sewer overflow (CSO) events, and providing pre-treatment for high-strength dairy and food processing wastewater to reduce strain on downstream municipal facilities.

Prior to her appointment, Moore worked as the Water Resources Group Leader at Stone Environmental, a consulting firm headquartered in Montpelier, Vermont. Moore earned a Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering, cum laude, from the University at Buffalo and a Master of Science in Environmental Science and Policy from the Department of Geography and Environmental Engineering at the Johns Hopkins University. She is a registered professional engineer in Vermont.

Moore lives in Middlesex, Vermont with her husband and two college-age children. In her free time, Moore enjoys gardening, pottery, and exploring Vermont's landscape.