My brother, Keith Goldberg, went missing on January 31, 2012. His remains were found in Lake Mead National Park on April 14, 2013. Red Rock Search and Rescue, a volunteer search team covered over 200 square miles searching for Keith for a full year and were unable to gain access to Lake Mead to search for him without a costly insurance policy and liability waiver. We had sufficient evidence to believe Keith could be found in Lake Mead and the search would have been focused in that area much sooner. Volunteer search teams fill the void left when police searches end due to limited resources. After months of working on ways to obtain affordable insurance coverage, we raised the funds and the policy was purchased. Within two hours of entering Lake Mead National Park, my brother's remains were located. If the search teams didn't have to maneuver through all this red tape, they would have been able to enter the park six months sooner. If Red Rock Search and Rescue weren't so dedicated to solving Keith's case and so tenacious, there would have been no more coordinated searches for Keith. He may not have ever been found.

Families of missing loved ones go through so much pain and despair. Our communities are so very fortunate to have organizations like Red Rock who are there to help. Keith's story is a tragic one and it is not over. We have a trial in 2014 and his remains have still yet to be returned home. But the one positive shining light, perhaps Keith's legacy, is that this legislation passes and hopefully not another family will have to experience the prolonged pain and suffering ours did.
