

Betsy Robblee
Conservation and Advocacy Director
The Mountaineers

As the Conservation and Advocacy Director, Betsy leads The Mountaineers conservation and advocacy programming, including shaping conservation and recreation legislation and land management decisions, driving partnerships, executing advocacy campaigns and communications, and supporting fundraising efforts that result in long-term outcomes to protect public lands and the outdoor experience. Betsy joined The Mountaineers with ten years of experience in policy, advocacy, and community engagement. She previously served as the Policy and Outreach Manager at the Washington Wildlife and Recreation Coalition, where she led advocacy campaigns in support of funding for conservation and recreation projects in Washington State. Earlier in her career, she spent six years in Washington, DC as a legislative aide to Senator Patty Murray and Congressman Rick Larsen. An outdoor enthusiast, Betsy enjoys hiking, trail running, mountaineering, bicycling, and skiing.
