

Ronald Scott Lindsey – Edmonson County Judge/Executive

Ronald Scott Lindsey proudly serves as Judge/Executive of Edmonson County, where his leadership is guided by a deep respect for the people, traditions, and natural beauty that define the community. A lifelong advocate for rural Kentucky, Scott believes the strength of local government comes from listening to citizens, working together to solve problems, and protecting the values that make small communities thrive.

As Judge/Executive, Scott focuses on responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars, improving county infrastructure, and creating opportunities that allow families and small businesses to succeed without losing the rural character of Edmonson County. He works closely with community leaders, state officials, and federal partners to ensure the county has a strong voice when it comes to economic development, tourism, and public services.

Scott is especially passionate about protecting and promoting one of Kentucky's greatest natural treasures, Mammoth Cave National Park. He recognizes the park not only as a world-renowned landmark, but as a vital economic engine for the region and a source of pride for the people who call Edmonson County home.

Known for being approachable and accessible, Scott believes public service is about being present in the community—whether that means attending local events, meeting with citizens to hear their concerns, or working with Fiscal Court to plan for the county's future.

Above all, Scott Lindsey believes Edmonson County's greatest asset is its people, and he remains committed to building a future where the next generation can live, work, and raise their families in the place they proudly call home.

Scott lives in the Chalybeate Community of Edmonson County with his beautiful wife, Teresa. They have 3 children, Shannon, Heather, and Ryan along with 4 grandchildren in twins Justin and Dustin, Lukas, and Penelope Jo.
