

Ethan Tyler
Sr. Director, Public Policy and Lands
The Aleut Corporation (Aleut)

Ethan Tyler directs Aleut's land use strategy, interagency coordination, and public policy efforts, including the corporation's long-term vision for the region. He has more than 20 years of experience in Alaska Native Corporation management, government affairs, infrastructure planning, and land management across Alaska. Ethan's work helps to align Aleut's regional development and resource development projects with national security priorities, market forces and Aleut shareholder benefits.

About Aleut:

Aleut's mission is to maximize dividends and opportunities for our shareholders.

Incorporated on June 21, 1972, as one of 12 Alaska Native regional corporations established under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, Aleut proudly represents over 5,000 Alaska Native shareholders and descendants of Unanga (Aleut) descent from the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands of Alaska.

Through the successful operation of our businesses and stewardship of lands and resources, Aleut strives to make meaningful economic impact in the Aleut Region and in the lives of our shareholders and descendants through dividends, employment, training, and cultural support.
