

Quantifying Why Democrats Support Open Borders

Share 80 Comments Listen By PETER KIRSANOW

October 31, 2024 1:19 PM

A Center for Immigration Studies report released today quantifies why Democrats support, or are indifferent to, open borders. The figures underlying the study may stun even the strongest proponents of border security.

The net effect of increases in both legal and illegal immigration in the 2020 Census shifted 17 House seats and 17 Electoral College votes, resulting in a net gain of 14 seats in Blue States — ten seats shifting from red states and four from battleground states. That Democratic net gain is greater than the respective electoral votes of all but ten states.

In part because districts with high percentages of noncitizens tend to vote Democrat, “of the 24 districts where one in five adults is not an American citizen, 20 were won by a Democrat in 2022. In contrast, the Democrat won in just five of the 54 districts where 98 percent of adults are citizens.”

Millions of illegal aliens have flooded the country during the Biden presidency. An indeterminate number — estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands — have been flown into the country by the Biden administration and deposited in certain jurisdictions.

Increasingly, Democrats needn't be concerned about persuading American voters. They've gained electoral votes by the addition — strategic or otherwise — of illegal immigrants.

This is a “fundamental transformation” of the country.

← BACK TO THE CORNERShare 80 Comments

Oops! Something isn't working as it should.

Don't stress! We're working to get things up and running again as soon as possible.

Reload

5a1e5753-69fa-48b4-936b-5d3fa27aa9ea

