

Chris Mohr is the President of the Software & Information Industry Association, a trade association dedicated to serving the needs of firms in the business of information. Before assuming this role, he served as its chief legal officer and its leading voice on intellectual property matters, spearheading both its antipiracy initiatives and its IP policy advocacy. Chris has testified before both Congress and state legislatures on both intellectual property and constitutional law issues. He is the architect of SIIA's strategic filing program, a long-term policy blueprint that touches on pivotal issues like privacy, taxation, patents, and more, targeting federal appellate and Supreme Court decisions. In his previous private practice, Chris was involved in several appellate and Supreme Court cases involving speech, intellectual property, and privacy.
