- Another noteworthy public review came from Judge Richard Kopf (U.S.D.C. Nebraska), who described this article by Professor Kochan in the following way:

As the above-quoted abstract demonstrates, Donald J. Kochan, Professor of Law at Chapman University School of Law in Orange, California, has written a fascinating and very useful article about a single word, “conclusory.” Donald J. Kochan, WHILE EFFUSIVE, “CONCLUSORY” IS STILL QUITE ELUSIVE: THE STORY OF A WORD, IQBAL, AND A PERPLEXING LEXICAL INQUIRY OF SUPREME IMPORTANCE, 73 University of Pittsburgh Law Review, No. 2, 2011 (2013).

I urge federal civil practitioners and members of the Academy who are interested in federal civil procedure to read Professor Kochan’s especially thoughtful and incredibly detailed analysis. In particular, I found Appendix E, Supreme Court Opinions with Occurrence of the Words “Conclusory” or “Nonconclusory”: Citations with Information Regarding Each Occurrence Including Justice Authoring Opinion, Type of Opinion, and Surrounding Words Indicating Context of Usage (1942–2011), to be particularly useful and fascinating.

Professor Kochan’s article proves, once again, that dedicated law professors can really help judges and practitioners when they put their minds to it.
