

Sanjukta Paul is Assistant Professor of Law at Wayne State University and a fellow of the Thurman Arnold Project at Yale University. Her current research lies at the intersection of antitrust and labor regulation, and she teaches in the areas of labor, corporations, and antitrust law.

Paul's scholarship has appeared or is forthcoming in, among others, the UCLA Law Review, Law & Contemporary Problems, the Berkeley Journal of Employment & Labor Law, and The Cambridge Handbook of U.S. Labor Law for the Twenty-First Century. Her paper "The Enduring Ambiguities of Antitrust Liability for Worker Collective Action" was recognized with the Jerry S. Cohen Memorial Fund's award for the best antitrust scholarship of 2016 (category prize). She is at work on a book, Solidarity in the Shadow of Antitrust (under contract with Cambridge University Press), which traces and reinterprets the development of antitrust law in terms of its allocation of economic coordination rights, with a particular focus on work and workers.

Paul also regularly writes for broader audiences, with recent pieces in The American Prospect, Aeon, and The Nation (forthcoming), as well as blogs such as OnLabor and the Law & Political Economy blog. She or her work are frequently cited in the press, recently including for example The Wall Street Journal and The Guardian.

Paul was previously a research and teaching fellow at UCLA School of Law, and prior to that, a public interest attorney in Los Angeles focusing on labor and civil rights issues. She earned a JD from Yale Law School and completed a judicial clerkship on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.
