

Trina McClendon is the co-founder and owner of Trinity Poultry Farm, LLC in Southwest Mississippi. In 2003, Trina and her late husband, Rusty McClendon, built a commercial poultry operation and started full-time in the agriculture industry. Over the past 19 years, Trinity Poultry Farm has raised 129 million pounds of chickens and provided a number of jobs in the local community. Trina consistently ranks as one of the top poultry growers in her region of Mississippi.

Prior to building the farm with her husband, Trina worked as a secretary in the insurance and banking sectors. Since 2018, she has served on the Board of Directors for Mississippi Women in Agriculture, an organization committed to advocating for and promoting women-owned farms and goods and providing scholarships to young women wanting to enter into the Agriculture Industry. Trina's mission is to promote and expand agriculture as a community-based endeavor to feed America and educate on the importance of local farmers to the food supply chain.

Trina was born and raised in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, but has lived in Gillsburg, Mississippi for 38 years. In her spare time, she enjoys herb gardening, foraging and preserving her food.
