

Nayda Alvarez is a teacher, a mother, a grandmother, and a border landowner. Her family has lived along the border in Starr County, Texas, for at least five generations. She has received letters from the U.S. government indicating its intention to take her property for construction of a border wall that would cross her back yard.