

Solidarity Statement – Supporting Communities Targeted for Hate

We, the undersigned civil rights and legal organizations, come together across different communities to stand in solidarity with Asian American and immigrant communities confronting a terrifying spike in COVID-19 related hate incidents. We call on our local, state, and national leaders to condemn this hate and to ensure communities have the resources necessary to combat this rise in hate and xenophobia. Throughout our history, too many have been targeted for discrimination, in many cases for generations, and often during times of great economic and social upheaval.

Just as we have seen in previous times of national crisis, some seek to take advantage of fear and pain to advance racist ideologies and policies, while also inspiring other acts of hate. Over the last several weeks, we have seen white supremacists and others seek to weaponize this fear and anxiety in order to advance their own hateful ideologies. There is a devastating spike in acts of hate targeting Asian Americans. We are also seeing an increase in the targeting of immigrants, the LGBTQ community, Muslims, Jews, people with disabilities, and people of color.<sup>1</sup>

Asian American civil rights organizations at the national level,<sup>2</sup> organizations at the state level,<sup>3</sup> and countless local community centers and service providers, are leading efforts to both document hate targeting the Asian American community and to serve the needs of the people targeted. While federal data regarding the increase is not yet available, the numbers these organizations are seeing over the last month look more like what they might see over a year.

Leaders must stop the use of anti-Asian terminology related to COVID-19 that does nothing to help people suffering from the virus in the United States, but rather perpetuates anti-Asian stigma that has inspired hate violence targeting the Asian American community. Leaders must ensure survivors of acts of hate and their families have the support they need following hate incidents and hate crimes. Local community organizations who serve people who are targeted for hate, as well as local law enforcement, must have the resources and training to prevent and respond more effectively to hate incidents and hate crime. Language access for law enforcement as well as anyone providing emergency response and recovery services is also critical.

Many of the people who are on the front lines of this crisis treating the sick as home health care workers, nurses, doctors, and technicians, and who are working on farms and in groceries, and in other parts of the service sector to ensure our country has the food and services it needs to survive, are from the same communities increasingly targeted for hate. In the face of hate, members of our communities are doing what we have done for generations, coming together in shared sacrifice to help people regardless of race, color, national origin, ethnicity, immigration status, gender, gender identity, sexual orientation, religion, age, or disability. This pandemic requires unity and working together with the resources we have to fight this virus. Therefore, we call on our leaders to join us in continuing to combat the hate and bigotry that threatens to divide us.
