Russell Brown | CEO

Russell Brown is one of the nation's leading labor experts specializing in maintaining a union free workplace. Brown's experience includes: National Labor Relations Act cases, Railway Labor Act cases and Canadian Industrial Relations Board cases. As the CEO of RWP Labor and the President of the Center for Independent Employees he works for both employers and employees who are oppressed by unions.

Brown works extensively on labor policy where he is an Adjunct Fellow and contributor for some of America's leading free market think tanks. He currently serves as the Vice-Chairman of the North American Transportation Employee Relations Association (NATERA.org) Brown has published several articles and studies on labor policy; his publications have appeared in Forbes, Washington Examiner, The Hill, American Spectator, On Point and several other periodicals. Brown has testified before the National Labor Relations Board, National Mediation Board and the Department of Labor on regulations that threaten the stability of American business.

Brown began his professional life at Delta Air Lines where he worked multiple positions including flight operations and public relations. With the experience and knowledge he gained from the 24/7 - 365 day a year global operation, he retired early and took over a family business. His company was a vendor to the nation's railroads providing transportation and logistics services. Brown led his company through an acquisition and continued to lead the transition for more than 1,200 employees throughout the western United States.

After leaving the transportation industry, Brown took his expertise leading large workforces in assisting companies with their labor relations. Brown joined the Center for Independent Employees as President, working in giving the Independent Employee a true voice in a unionized environment. This is a continuation of Brown's beliefs that third party interference causes American businesses to be less productive, and threatens their viability.