

CDR Tom Reynolds (USN) ret, is the Chief Strategy Officer at Seasats Inc., a U.S. small business based in San Diego, CA which designs, develops, manufactures, and operates small, unmanned surface vessels.

Tom is a retired U.S. Navy Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) Officer and veteran of 6 Operation Iraqi Freedom deployments and several other combat deployments – all of which included the involvement of unmanned systems. He is the former EOD Branch Chief at Joint Special Operations Command, Special Operations Advisor to the Commander of U.S. Forces in Iraq, and the Commander of the EOD and Diving Task Group in 5th Fleet.

Following his retirement from the Navy in January 2013, Tom joined Hydroid Inc., the worlds largest Unmanned Underwater Vehicles company. Hydroid, Inc. was acquired by Huntington Ingalls Industries (HII) where he then became Vice President for Business Development for HII Unmanned Systems.

He is a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy, Singapore Armed Forces Training Institute, and U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and holds an MBA from Benedictine College.

Tom is also on the national board of directors of the Association for Uncrewed Vehicle Systems International (AUVSI) and a Trustee of the U.S. Naval Academy Foundation.

Tom lives in Potomac MD with his wife Suzanne and three children, and his dog.