

Travis Brouwer joined ODOT in 2005 and has served as ODOT's Assistant Director since 2014. In this capacity he oversees the Director's Office, which includes Government Relations, Communications, the Ask ODOT customer service group, the Oregon Transportation Commission staff, the Agency Performance and Strategy Section, and the Office of Innovation.

He served for eight years as the agency's Federal Affairs Advisor, working with Oregon's congressional delegation and advising the Director and Oregon Transportation Commission on federal legislation, funding and policy.

Prior to joining ODOT he worked for Congresswoman Darlene Hooley for six and a half years, including serving as her District Co-Director and running her Salem district office.

Travis graduated from Willamette University in 1999 with a degree in politics. He lives in Salem with his wife and three children.
