

Megan Salrin

Legislative Representative
United Steelworkers

Megan Salrin is a Legislative Representative for the United Steelworkers (USW) in its Legislative and Policy Department. USW's Legislative and Policy Department works to protect workers through the use of policy and legislative action at all levels of government. In her role, she leads the Union's appropriations efforts and focuses on a variety of issues facing the paper and glass sectors. Megan also handles issues related to trade, domestic content preferences, transportation, and more.

Prior to joining USW, Megan worked for three Members of Congress from the Midwest – Pete Visclosky, Frank Mrvan, and Marcy Kaptur. During these roles, she was the lead staffer for the Congressional Steel Caucus and the Congressional Auto Caucus, where she ensured labor always had a seat at the table.

Megan earned a B.A. in Economics and Political Science from Valparaiso University. Raised in a Steelworker family in the small town of Rensselaer, Indiana, she currently resides in Washington, DC.
