

David Dyssegaard Kallick is deputy director of the Fiscal Policy Institute and visiting assistant professor at the Pratt Institute's Pratt Institute's Graduate School for City and Regional Planning.

Kallick's work on immigration includes studies of the economic role of immigrants in New York State, and in states and metropolitan areas around the country. He has produced groundbreaking research on immigrant business ownership, including Bringing Vitality to Main Street: How Immigrant Small Businesses Help Local Economies Grow. He has become a leading voice on refugee integration as lead author on studies mixing quantitative and qualitative methods to draw an in-depth portrait of refugee integration. And he has led studies to show the costs and benefits of numerous public policy proposals, from the New York State Dream Act to comprehensive immigration reform.

Kallick was deeply involved in the planning process surrounding rebuilding New York after September 11, leading the Labor Community Advocacy Network to Rebuild New York, which won the American Planning Association's Lawrence M. Orton Award for leadership in city and regional planning.

He has written extensively for both peer-reviewed journals and books and for the popular press. Kallick is a contributing author to One Out of Three: Immigrant New York in the 21st Century (Columbia University Press); New York and Amsterdam: Immigration and the New Urban Landscape (NYU Press); New York 400: A Visual History of America's Greatest City (Running Press); America's Mayor, America's President: The Strange Career of Rudy Giuliani (Soft Skull Press, co-authored with James Parrott), Progressive Politics in the Global Age (Polity Press), Cities at Risk: Catastrophe, Recovery and Renewal in New York and New Orleans (Milano/The New School), and he has published several articles on immigration issues in Regional Labor Review. Kallick is a frequent commentator for news and talk shows, and his writings have been published in the New York Times, Daily News, Newsday, Huffington Post, The Nation, and numerous other venues.

In addition to his work on immigration and urban planning in New York, Kallick has written on a wide variety of social and economic issues, including economic development, citizen participation, and Scandinavian economic and social issues.
