

With nearly 20 years of experience, Rich Palmer rises above the crowd as the co-founder and CTO of Gravyty, the leading AI company for social good which garnered him awards, patents, and accolades such as the Boston Business Journal's coveted 40 Under 40 and Babson College's esteemed Entrepreneurship Award where he also graduated Summa Cum Laude. After a highly successful exit, Rich became Managing Director of Launchpad Venture Group and an Entrepreneur-in-Residence at Babson College. He has invested in dozens of promising startups, and advises and speaks regularly on entrepreneurship, including as a TEDx speaker for harnessing vulnerability in entrepreneurial pursuits.

He holds a dual major BS in Information Technology and Economics from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute (RPI) and began his career on Wall Street where he led product development at Relationship Science and was head of portfolio analytics for S&P CapitalIQ's quantitative intelligence team.