

Josh Phillips is a young, dedicated, and community-minded small business owner from the southwest corner of Washington State in the rural town of Ilwaco. Josh grew up in the Pacific Northwest experiencing all that it had to offer. He attended Gonzaga University and graduated with a Business Degree. Six years ago, he started his company, Spawn Fly Fish. Aiming to bring positive change and sustainable development to Ilwaco through his company, he believes in the power of collaboration, effective governance, transparency, inclusivity, and progress. He regularly volunteers his time and resources for local events and shares his knowledge and experience with other local small business owners and high school students, emphasizing the intricacies of running a small business in rural America. With his experience and commitment, Josh Phillips is dedicated to ensuring a brighter future not just for Ilwaco but for small businesses around the country.
