

Dr. Tammira Lucas, an esteemed figure in business and academia, holds the honor of being recognized among Baltimore's Top 40 under 40. As a distinguished business professor, she has emerged as a trailblazer among millennial professionals, wielding her influence as a powerful voice for communities locally, nationally, and internationally.

At the helm of The Cube Cowork, the largest black women-owned coworking space in the United States with innovative babysitting services, Dr. Lucas has reshaped the professional landscape. Her commitment to fostering equitable communities through entrepreneurship is further exemplified by her role as a catalyst for change.

A graduate of an HBCU, Dr. Lucas channels her passion for women in business, particularly mothers, through her leadership and advocacy. Co-founding The National Association of Mom Entrepreneurs (formerly Moms As Entrepreneurs), she serves as a guiding force, providing advocacy, support, and essential resources for mom entrepreneurs.

Beyond her distinguished roles as an Author, Speaker, Philanthropist, and Professor, Dr. Lucas is deeply committed to community building. Serving on the boards of various community organizations, she actively contributes to creating equitable spaces through entrepreneurship. Her expertise in leadership, education, social innovation, and entrepreneurship is not confined to the classroom; it resonates through her involvement in diverse community initiatives.

Armed with three business degrees, including a Doctor of Business Administration, Dr. Lucas embodies academic excellence and an unwavering commitment to knowledge. However, her ultimate source of pride lies in her family—her daughter, Ryann, and husband, Robert.

Dr. Tammira Lucas continues to make significant contributions, both academically and in community service, leaving an indelible mark on the realms of business and equitable community development.
