

Nathan Ohle currently serves as the Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of the Rural Community Assistance Partnership (RCAP), a national network of non-profits focused on access water, economic development, and capacity building for rural communities across the country. RCAP's work in assisting some of the smallest rural communities in the US helps to build capacity and opportunity in every state across the country. Nathan previously served as the Senior Advisor at the US Economic Development Administration (EDA), and served on the White House Rural Council, leading the engagement in place-based initiatives across the Department of Commerce. Nathan was recently selected as one of 40 Under 40 Rising Stars in economic development internationally. Additionally, Nathan has earned two bachelor's degrees from Michigan State University.
