

Eddie Bustamante was born and raised in Denver, CO. His parents are immigrants from Mexico who instilled in him a great work ethic and the value of the opportunities this country has to offer. He has lived his entire life with the aspiration of protecting workers in our society because they are the ones that make this world buzz. Growing up, he saw first hand the struggles of the working class and the need for a voice to demand equity.

First introduced to Labor advocacy when he joined the Laborers' International Union of North America in 2016. He is now the Political and Legislative Director for LIUNA Local 720, representing construction craft laborers in Colorado, statewide. He takes great pride in fighting every day for workers to have family sustaining wages and benefits, quality training, and meaningful worker protections; we owe it to them.
