

Manju Puri is the J. B. Fuqua Professor at the Fuqua School of Business, Duke University. Her research focuses on commercial banks, investment banks, venture capital, entrepreneurship and FinTech. Her research has won multiple awards including four best paper awards in top finance journals and six conference best paper awards. Her professional leadership roles include serving as Editor of the Review of Financial Studies, Director of American Finance Association (AFA), Vice-President Elect of the Western Finance Association, past President of Financial Intermediation Research Society, past Chair of AFFECT, the (AFA) Female Advocacy Committee, She is a Research Associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research; Director, American Finance Association; Vice-President Elect, Western Finance Association; Fellow, Financial Management Association; Senior Fellow, Asian Bureau of Finance and Economics Research; Research Member, European Corporate Governance Institute.

Puri has also served in a number of regulatory/policy capacities. She serves as Senior Advisor to the FDIC, Center for Financial Studies; on the Advisory Panel, Bank for International Settlements, Basel; was on an advisory committee for the Govt. of India; has served on the Model Validation Council at Board of Governors; and served on the Financial Advisory Roundtable (as a group of select economists who advise the President of Federal Reserve Bank, New York). Before joining Duke University, she was on the faculty at the Stanford Graduate School of Business.