

Myles Lennon
Short Bio

I am an environmental anthropologist, Dean's Assistant Professor of Environment & Society and Anthropology at Brown University, and a former sustainable energy policy practitioner. My research has been supported by the U.S. National Science Foundation, the Ford Foundation, and the Wenner-Gren Foundation. I hold a B.A. in Development Studies from Brown University and a Ph.D in environmental anthropology from Yale University. My research and scholarly objectives are informed by my experience as a sustainable energy practitioner and advocate in New York for almost a decade.
