

Katie Bach is an expert in job quality and low-wage work. Katie has worked with dozens of companies, ranging from Fortune 50 to start-ups, on improving jobs.

Katie is currently a nonresident senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, where she writes about corporate practices related to workers and employment. She is also the Chief Business Officer of &pizza, a 60-location pizza chain, where she oversees finance, strategy, HR, and tech. Previously, Katie was the Managing Director of the Good Jobs Institute, a non-profit that helps companies build systems to maximize the motivation, productivity, and contribution of employees in ways that led to better business results. Prior to that, she was the Director of Corporate Strategy at Starbucks, where she led strategic planning. Bach also spent five years in management consulting, primarily at McKinsey & Company.

Bach has published numerous articles in Harvard Business Review, Politico, Forbes, and elsewhere discussing the financial case for higher wages, why we need more than a $15 wage, and the need for corporate disclosure requirements on worker pay. She is the co-author of a Brookings report about stakeholder capitalism. Bach has an MBA from MIT Sloan, an MSc from the London School of Economics, and a BA from Oxford University. She lives in Northern Virginia with her husband and dog.