

Biography

Rebecca Burgess is the program manager for AEI's Program on American Citizenship, which produces original research on civic education, the health of America's public institutions, and the principles of American democracy. She focuses on veterans and their role in civil society and politics. She also analyzes public policies intended to assist veterans and their families.

Before coming to AEI, Ms. Burgess was the director of programs for external affairs at Hillsdale College, where she was also deputy editor of Imprimis. She has taught courses on American political theory and constitutional principles at Hillsdale College and the University of Dallas, where she also served as the director of residence life and student life for several years. Ms. Burgess is currently a doctoral candidate in politics at the University of Dallas.