

Bio & Experience

Tobias Peter is a senior fellow and the codirector of the American Enterprise Institute's Housing Center, where he focuses on housing risk and mortgage markets. Working closely with Edward Pinto, codirector of the AEI Housing Center, Mr. Peter has coauthored a variety of reports on housing policy, specifically on the impact of federal policy on housing demand and homeownership, housing finance risks, and first-time home buyers. He has testified before Congress, and his pieces have been published in policy journals and in the popular press, including in the Wall Street Journal, American Banker, and Business Insider.

He has a master's in public policy from the Harvard Kennedy School and a bachelor's degree in history and applied economics from the College of St. Scholastica.