

Barry Huston

Analyst in Social Policy, Congressional Research Service (CRS)

Mr. Huston has worked as an Analyst in Social Policy for the CRS for the past six years, providing support to Congress on issues related to Social Security benefits and program financing. As a member of the Income Security section covering Social Security, he also provides support on Social Security Disability Insurance and program rules.

Before joining CRS, Mr. Huston worked as an economist for the Social Security Administration and as an economist for the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Barry holds a B.S. in economics from the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, and a M.S. in applied economics from Marquette University.