An Overview of the Coalition of Services Industries

Founded over 40 years ago, the Coalition of Services Industries is the leading industry association devoted exclusively to promoting the international objectives of service sectors. We produce tangible, commercially meaningful results by advocating for trade disciplines, market access commitments, regulatory systems and modernized customs processes that ensure fair competition in services and digital trade.

We work globally to obtain solutions to significant international services issues. These include eliminating barriers to market access, both for cross-border delivery of services and affiliates; promoting cross-border data flows and advocating against forced data localization; creating a level playing field for U.S. companies competing with state-owned enterprises; ensuring greater regulatory transparency and due process; and strengthening global value chains.

CSI represents the interests of all sectors of the U.S. service economy. Our members include companies, trade associations, and professional associations. CSI represents the broad array of U.S.-based entities that provide services domestically and internationally, including technology, telecommunications, media and entertainment, express delivery and logistics, retail and distribution services, banking and insurance, professional services, and other services.

Our members include companies that are both manufacturers and service providers, with offices in almost every congressional district in the United States.

CSI is led by Christine Bliss, former Assistant U.S. Trade Representative for Services, Investment, Telecommunication, and E-commerce. Bliss served as an attorney and lead negotiator on services and financial services in U.S. FTAs including the Trans-Pacific Partnership, in World Trade Organization (WTO) services bilateral accession and Doha Services Negotiations, and in bilateral investment treaty negotiations.
