

Stephen A. Seche is a senior analyst in the Washington, DC office of Dentons US LLP, an international law firm with extensive ties to the Middle East.

He spent 35 years as a U.S. foreign service officer. From 2011-20013, he served as Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs at the Department of State, with responsibility for U.S. relations with the GCC states and Yemen. He served as the U.S. Ambassador to Yemen from 2007 - 2010.

During the 2006-07 academic year, Ambassador Seche was a Visiting Fellow at the University of Southern California, where he taught in the master's degree program in public diplomacy. On his return from Yemen, he spent a year at the Institute for the Study of Diplomacy at Georgetown University, leading a graduate seminar in the School of Foreign Service.

From February 2005-August 2006, Ambassador Seche served as Charge d'Affaires at the U.S. Embassy in Damascus, Syria; he was Deputy of Chief of Mission for the six months prior. This was his second tour in Damascus: from 1999-2002, he was Counselor for Public Affairs and Director of the American Cultural Center. He spent the two years between his Damascus assignments as Director of the Office for Egypt and Levant Affairs at the Department of State in Washington, DC.

Ambassador Seche spent the first seven years of his foreign-service career in public diplomacy positions in Guatemala, Peru, and Bolivia. Other overseas assignments have included Ottawa, Canada and New Delhi, India. He received his undergraduate degree from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, and spent four years as a journalist before entering the Foreign Service.

He is married to Susan Canning; the couple has three daughters.
