

Megan Alvanna Stimpfle is the Founder and Principal Strategist of Arctic Geopolitical Consulting. She currently serves as the Self-Governance Liaison for Norton Sound Health Corporation, focused on governance and sewer and water issues in the Bering Strait region of Alaska. She has served as Chief of her tribe, the King Island Native Community in Nome, Alaska, is a former Commissioner of the Port of Nome, and was the Alaska Federation of Native's 2016 Keynote speaker. She served as a legislative assistant for Senator Lisa Murkowski in Washington D.C. responsible for policies addressing infrastructure & sanitation, housing, health delivery, public safety and justice, land management, as well as fish & wildlife management for Alaska Natives and rural Alaskans. She was as the lead staffer in establishing the Senate Arctic Caucus. She assisted in organizing the Arctic Imperative Summits in Girdwood, Alaska to bring arctic and coastal Alaskan issues to the forefront of American policy. She was involved in the historic 2010 election of Senator Lisa Murkowski and the election of Senator Dan Sullivan. Megan was born and raised in Nome, Alaska and takes pride in Eskimo dancing and learning her Inupiaq language. She holds a Master's in Applied Economics from Johns Hopkins University and a B.S. in Economics from George Mason University.