

Bio:

Katie Kraska is the Senior Manager of Federal Legislation for the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Katie joined the ASPCA's Government Relations team in 2017 where she leads the organization's pioneering equine protection work at the federal, and at times state, levels. With a background in wildlife management and conservation policy, Katie has worked on public lands management and the social dimensions of science through various roles in South Florida, East Africa, Southeast Asia, New Zealand, and Europe. Notably, Katie was a U.S. Fulbright Research grantee to Indonesia in 2014, where she studied the politics of international conservation and ecotourism, and she remains a Fulbright Alumni Ambassador for the program. She holds a master's degree in Philosophy and Public Policy from the London School of Economics and Political Science, and dual degrees in Biology and Art History from DePauw University. She is based in Washington, D.C. but will always be true to her Kentucky roots.
