

John Rumpler, Clean Water Program Director and Senior Attorney for Environment America. John coordinates Environment America’s efforts to protect clean water - including campaigns to “Get the Lead Out” of drinking water and to prevent pollution of America’s waterways. He has co-authored several research reports – including Get the Lead Out, Safe for Swimming?, Fracking by the Numbers, and Corporate Agribusiness and the Fouling of America’s Waterways. John has also testified before Congress on enforcement of clean water laws.

Prior to starting his position at Environment America in 2003, John represented community organizations in state and local environmental cases. He began his environmental activism at Tufts University in 1985, and then worked in various roles with the PIRGs before earning his law degree at Northeastern University School of Law in 1996. John lives and works in Boston, Massachusetts.
