

Dr. Vanessa Neumann is an authority on Latin American politics and security, as well as on crime-terror pipelines, particularly on stemming illicit trade as a counter-terrorist and counter-insurgency strategy that supports businesses. She is the author Blood Profits: How American Consumers Unwittingly Fund Terrorists (St. Martin's Press, 2017). Dr. Neumann served four years on the OECD's Task Force on Countering Illicit Trade (since its inception) and on their Advisory Group.

She holds a Ph.D. in political philosophy from Columbia University, and fellowships at Yale University, Columbia University and the Foreign Policy Research Institute. Her company Asymmetrica is a member of the Global Counter Terrorism Research Network (GCTRN) for the United Nations Security Council's Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (CTED). Her other work for government and law enforcement has encompassed INTERPOL, the Asymmetric Warfare Group, the US State Department, and the US Defense Department. Notably, Dr. Neumann edited and reviewed the teaching and reference text for the US Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) on counterinsurgency in Colombia.

In the early 1990s, Dr. Neumann worked in corporate planning and corporate finance for a Latin American conglomerate, culminating in its IPO (initial public offering) on the New York Stock Exchange in 1993, making the company only the third in all of Latin America to be listed on the NYSE. She is a member of the board of directors of the Latin American Herald Tribune and is currently advising a Latin American political campaign.
