

Michael Doran is a Senior Fellow at the Hudson Institute in Washington, DC, where he specializes in Middle East security issues. In the administration of President George W. Bush, Doran served in the White House as a senior director in the National Security Council with responsibility for the entire Middle East except Iraq. Before coming to Hudson, Doran was a Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution, and he has also held positions at NYU, Princeton, and the University of Central Florida. He publishes frequently in major newspapers and magazines, and his latest book, Ike's Gamble, is a study in the evolution of President Eisenhower's Middle East strategy. He received a B.A. from Stanford and an M.A. and Ph.D. from Princeton.
