

Ms. Katherine Zimmerman

Katherine Zimmerman is a research fellow at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) and the research manager for AEI's Critical Threats Project. As AEI's senior analyst studying terrorist groups, she focuses on the global al Qaeda network and covers the Salafi-jihadi movement and related trends in the Middle East and Africa. She also specializes in al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula and Yemen, al Shabaab in Somalia, and al Qaeda in the Sahel.

Ms. Zimmerman has testified before Congress about the threats to US national security interests emanating from al Qaeda and its network. She has also briefed members of Congress, their staff, and US military, diplomatic, and intelligence community personnel. Her analyses have been widely published, including in CNN.com, Foreign Affairs, FoxNews.com, The Hill, The Huffington Post, Real Clear World, The Wall Street Journal, and The Washington Post.

She is a member of the RESOLVE Network Research Advisory Council, improving the quality of research and findings on violent extremism for policymakers, practitioners, and academics around the world.

She graduated with distinction from Yale University with a B.A. in political science and modern Middle East studies.

Experience:

American Enterprise Institute, AEI Critical Threats Project: Research Manager, 2016–present; Research Fellow, 2014–present; Senior Analyst, 2013–14; Analyst, 2010–13

Education:

B.A., political science and modern Middle East studies, Yale University