

Dr. Cynthia Miller-Idriss

Dr. Cynthia Miller-Idriss is Professor of Education and Sociology and Director of Research at the Center for University Excellence (CUE) at the American University in Washington, DC.

She has spent two decades researching radical and extreme youth culture in Europe and the U.S., most recently through a focus on how clothing, style and symbols act as a gateway into white supremacist extremist scenes and subcultures. She also writes widely on higher education issues and school-based responses to rising hate.

Dr. Miller-Idriss is the author of The Extreme Gone Mainstream: Commercialization and Far Right Youth Culture in Germany (Princeton University Press, 2018); Seeing the World: How U.S. Universities Produce Knowledge about the World (with Mitchell Stevens and Seteney Shami, Princeton University Press, 2018) and Blood and Culture: Youth, Right-Wing Extremism, and National Belonging in Contemporary Germany (Duke University Press, 2009). She is co-editor of Gender and the Radical and Extreme Right: Mechanisms of Transmission and the Role of Educational Interventions with Hilary Pilkington, Routledge, 2018) and co-editor of Middle East Studies for the New Millennium: Infrastructures of Knowledge (with Seteney Shami, New York University Press, 2016) and has published dozens of additional peer-reviewed articles, book chapters, and essays on nationalism, extremism, education, higher education and internationalization. She is currently completing a new book, Hate in the Homeland: The New Places and Spaces of Far Right Extremism. In addition to her academic writing, Dr. Miller-Idriss writes frequently for the mainstream press on youth radicalization, white supremacist extremism, and education, with recent by-lines at CNN Style, The Guardian, Le Monde, The New York Times, The Washington Post, Salon, and Fortune. Miller-Idriss appears regularly in the U.S. and European print and broadcast media as an expert source and political commentator.

Dr. Miller-Idriss' research has been funded by grants and fellowships from the National Science Foundation, the Spencer Foundation, the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), the Economic and Social Research Council (U.K.) and the Goethe Institute, among others. From 2009-2012 she was a nominated fellow in the Teagle Foundation's National Forum on the Future of Liberal Education. She has received several research and teaching awards, including the 2019 D.C. Sociological Society's Morris Rosenberg Award and a 2013-14 global fellowship from the Morphomata Center for Advanced Studies at the Universität zu Köln, Germany. She is also a Senior Fellow at the Centre for Analysis on the Radical Right (CARR) and an active member of the American Sociological Association, the Council for European Studies, and the Comparative and International Education Society.

Prior to her arrival at American University in August 2013, Dr. Miller-Idriss was an Assistant and then Associate Professor at New York University, and has also taught previously at the University of Maryland and the University of Michigan. She holds a Ph.D. and M.A. in Sociology and a Masters in Public Policy from the University of Michigan, and a B.A. (magna cum laude) in Sociology and German Area Studies from Cornell University.
