

Felix Horne is the Senior Ethiopia and Eritrea researcher for Human Rights Watch. Based in Ottawa he has documented the human rights dimensions of Ethiopia's development programs, telecom surveillance, media freedoms, misuse of the counterterrorism law and other topical issues in the Horn of Africa including most recently the year-long crackdown against peaceful protesters in Ethiopia. Prior to working for HRW, Felix has worked on a variety of indigenous rights and land issues in northern Canada and internationally including several years of research into the impacts of agricultural investment in several African countries. He holds a Masters in Resource and Environmental Management from Dalhousie University and an undergraduate degree in urban planning from the University of Saskatchewan.
