

Diane Katz Biography

Senior Research Fellow in Regulatory Policy

Heritage Foundation

Diane Katz is a senior research fellow in regulatory policy for the Heritage Foundation. Prior to joining Heritage in 2010, she served as director of risk, environment and energy policy at the Fraser Institute. From 2002 to 2008, she was director of the science, environment and technology initiative for the Mackinac Center for Public Policy.

She also served for nine years as a member of The Detroit News editorial board specializing in science and the environment, telecommunications and technology, and the auto industry.

Diane has been awarded several fellowships, including the Jack R. Howard Science Reporting Institute at the California Institute of Technology; the Paul Miller Washington Reporting Program; the Kinship Conservation Institute; and the Political Economy Research Center. Katz's analyses and commentary have been published by The Wall Street Journal, The Washington Times, National Review, The Weekly Standard and Reason Magazine in addition to dozens of regional and local newspapers and blogs. She has testified before Congress and several state legislatures.