

RICHARD E. FEINBERG

Richard Feinberg is professor of international political economy at the Graduate School of Public Policy and Strategy, University of California, San Diego. He is the book reviewer for the Western Hemisphere section of the publication of the Council on Foreign Relations, Foreign Affairs.

Prior to his arrival in California, Feinberg was Special Assistant to President Clinton and Senior Director of the National Security Council's Office of Inter-American Affairs (1993-96). As the President's senior adviser for Latin America, Feinberg was one of the principal architects of the 1994 Summit of the Americas in Miami.

Previously, Feinberg served as President of the Inter-American Dialogue and Executive Vice President of the Overseas Development Council (ODC). He has held positions on the State Department's Policy Planning Staff and worked as an international economist in the US Treasury Department's Office of International Affairs. He received his doctorate in economics from Stanford University and his bachelors' degree from Brown University.

Feinberg has authored more than 200 articles and books, including Summitry in the Americas: A Progress Report, The Intemperate Zone: The Third World Challenge to US Foreign Policy, and Subsidizing Success: The Export-Import Bank in the US Economy. His opinion editorials have appeared in many leading media in the United States and internationally, including The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Los Angeles Times, The Washington Times, and The Financial Times. Recent publications include Reaching Out: Cuba's New Economy and the International Response (Brookings, 2011), The New Cuban Economy: What Roles for Foreign Investment? (Brookings, 2012), and Soft Landing for Cuba? Emerging Entrepreneurs and Middle Classes (Brookings, 2013).

Feinberg has served on numerous non-profit boards and as a consultant to major philanthropic foundations, private corporations, financial institutions, and strategic advisory firms. To advance labor standards in developing countries, he served as senior advisor to BSR (Business for Social Responsibility) and to Forum Empresa (the consortium of Western Hemisphere national associations promoting corporate responsibility).
