Questions for Ms. Jacqueline Simon
Director of Public Policy, American Federation of Government Employees
Questions from Chairman Gerald E. Connolly

June 25, 2020, Hearing: “Frontline Feds: Serving the Public During a Pandemic”

1. While your members ensured a continuity of government services, how has the Administration engaged with AFGE to ensure your members’ health and safety needs are met?
2. Have federal agencies placed enough emphasis on having adequate PPE and other resources needed to fight the spread of the virus before returning federal employees to workstations?
3. What role should federal workers have in decisions on agency plans for reopening workstations? How can we ensure workers have adequate input in these decisions?
4. In cases where your members have children at home and they are required to report to their offices—and there isn’t daycare available or there isn’t school—what are they doing to get by each day? Was there anything in the federal guidance to support or assist employees who have children or other dependents?
5. Has the government communicated a contingency plan to your organization or your members should a spike in coronavirus occur?
6. Do you think that frontline federal workers should receive hazard pay, given the risks they face from the coronavirus pandemic? If so, why?
7. Should there be a presumption that federal employees who have tested positive for coronavirus and who are required to report to an office or engage directly with the public, contracted the virus at work? If so, why?
8. How should agencies continue to use telework during and after this global health crisis?
9. What are the remaining barriers to utilizing telework in the future? Are those barriers technological, or cultural reasons, or both?
