Justin D. Moore
Chief Executive Officer
American Physical Therapy Association

Justin D. Moore, PT, DPT, is chief executive officer of the American Physical Therapy Association (APTA), the national membership organization representing and promoting the profession of physical therapy in the United States. APTA exists to further the physical therapy profession's role in the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of movement dysfunctions and the enhancement of the health and functional abilities of the public.

Prior to being named CEO, Moore was APTA's executive vice president of public affairs. Before that, he served in several government affairs positions, including work as the association's lead lobbyist on Capitol Hill.

Moore, a licensed physical therapist, received his doctor of physical therapy degree (DPT) from Simmons College in Boston, Massachusetts, his master of physical therapy degree from University of Iowa, and his bachelor of science degree in dietetics from Iowa State University.

Moore has been honored for his contributions to physical therapy and public policy by receiving the R. Charles Harker Policymaker Award from APTA's Health Policy and Administration Section and the Distinguished Service Award from APTA's Academy of Pediatric Physical Therapy. In 2014, he received the Helen LaBaron Hilton Award from Iowa State University's College of Human Sciences.

In addition to his work with APTA, Moore also serves on the Executive Advisory Board of the Center of Health Services Training and Research (CoHSTAR), a collaboration to advance health services research in physical therapy; and as a senior associate editor to Physical Therapy, the scientific journal of APTA. He also served on the Northern Virginia Health Policy Forum Board of Directors in 2013 and 2014 and recently completed a 3-year term on Iowa State University's College of Human Sciences Board of Advisors.
