

A number of AFJ readers asked for more details regarding the spring photo that was on Page 40 of the July/August issue. USDA staffers indicate these blocks were placed under the hoof in the sole region to create excessive pressure. When the blocks were removed, the horse was lighter on its feet due to residual pain in the area. The package was taped around the foot so the horse could not pull or shake it off.