The Ecosystem Workforce Program (EWP) is an applied social science and extension program built on the fundamental belief that ecological, economy, and governance are intimately interconnected. Founded in 1994 at UO, today it is a joint program of UO's Institute for a Sustainable Environment and

Oregon State University's College of Forestry. EWP is continually informed by the needs of natural resource practitioners, managers, and decision-makers and has evolved to provide state-of-the-art social science research and communication aimed at promoting the resilience of forests and people. EWP employs diverse social science methods approaches on topics such as forest and watershed restoration, wildfire policy and management, forest governance, and rural economic development.
